Construction workers take advantage of the unusual January weather to make progress on the Hebron Community Center.

The center is scheduled to be completed late this summer.

“Everything is moving along well,” said Jay Bauer, city council member. “They’re going at it as soon as they can with the weather.”

Because of the recent bad weather, workers have been unable to pour cement.

“Basically they’re waiting on the weather,” said Bauer.

For those looking to rent the building once it’s completed, there is no current set rate. The council members are working to come up with pricing.
